In the following pages are given the Movement Exercises, and Copies that appeared in E. H. Robins' lessons in business writing in the Western Penman, from March, 1890, to January, 1891. Teachers of penmanship, and the readers of the Western Penman generally, were delighted with the practical trend of the lessons, and with the arrangement of the copies. It is in compliance with a general demand that these copies are reproduced here; and we believe that teachers and students will be glad of an opportunity to secure these lessons in compact form. The figures over the letters indicate the count used in their execution.

VARIETY BUSINESS WRITING.

In the following pages, are given a large variety of specimens of Business Writing by different penmen and business writers, that have been published, from time to time, in The Western Penman. These specimens represent the style of writing that is marketable in the commercial world, and hence, a style that should be learned by all. The Business Colleges of the country are teaching this style of writing, and it is our hope, that in the Public Schools will some day, be taught Practical Writing.

Prof. A. N. Palmer,
Dear Sir
As another charter member of the Western Penman family I take pleasure in testifying my appreciation of the source from whence we draw our penmanship strength, viz; the earnest advocate of muscular movement and common sense, "the Western Penman." It continues to improve and so do the subscribers who are faithful to its teachings; and what more need be said?
Yours truly
Asa R. Harris.

Seven months after date I promise to pay Henry C. Smith or order, Nine Million Dollars, value received. O. M. Hammond.

From copy executed rapidly with a coarse pen by E. K. Isaacs, Valparaiso, Ind.

This specimen of business writing was executed with a coarse pen at a high rate of speed.

Would a business man paying One Thousand Dollars or more per year for my services, prefer that I use a finer pen, and put on some fine hair lines and shades for the sake of beauty and to the detriment of speed?

Rapidly yours

G. N. Palmer.

Salem, Oregon. Sept. 4,

Friend Palmer,

Samples of the Penman have been received. The Penman as an aid in teaching muscular movement writing, has no equal. The series of lessons on business writing which you have had running for nearly two years. now, make it an inestimable help to both teacher and pupil.

Solid business writing is what we want; something we can make use of in our every day work. To introduce the Penman into a class, creates an interest and enthusiasm in the minds of the pupils. which otherwise, could not be done, and to just that extent lessens the labor of the teacher.

I would like to give Bro. Robins a hearty shake for the good practical lessons he is giving us. May the good work go on, is my wish.

Fraternally,

Yours of recent date at hand and contents noted. I feel honored in being asked to prepare a specimen of business writing for the Penman.

To express my gratitude to its honored Editor is beyond my command of language. Allow me to say that my success in this line thus far has been mainly through your influence, and the inspiration of the many enthusiastic contributors of the Penman.

May the days of the Western Penman be many, and forever spread the glad tidings "Muscular Movement" throughout the land.

Nothing is more noticeable in the tendency of the times than the drift of education towards the practical channels. The great system of public schools throughout the country has been found wholly inadequate to supply the young with just that technical knowledge that is necessary for them to have in order to obtain a livelihood. Consequently schools of practicality are arising on every hand and there is no class of these schools that have met with greater appreciation than the business colleges.

Time was when the merchant would undertake the task of educating boys and then undertraining them but in these busy days of active competition he has no time.

The young man must come to him prepared. He must have the ability to make the computations necessary in business life with rapidity and accuracy, must understand the art of keeping accounts with neatness and precision and must know the relations of trade the language of the counting room, usages and laws relating to commercial papers and the liabilities and disabilities attaching to all classes of persons, so if need be he can be trusted with the business interests of the house.

To acquire this needed knowledge, in the shortest time practicable and at the least expense, we advise pursuing the course of business training afforded at the LETTERING.

Next in utility to plain and ornamental writing we place lettering, especially those varieties that are applicable to commercial work. Among the more practical classes are found Old English, German Text, and the Rapid Marking styles. In the execution of the styles mentioned, the Soennecken lettering pens should be used. They are made in double and wide solid points. Whenever these pens are not obtainable at the book stores the publishers will send a supply for twenty-five cents.

In the execution of Rustic and other Ornamental Varieties of lettering, the letters should first be outlined with a lead pencil.

This style of writing is adapted to many uses and can be executed at a fair rate of speed. This was written with a Soennecken Pen No. 2, and reduced one half.

PEN DRAWING.

Closely allied to the newspaper and commercial industries of this country is pen drawing. Look over any of the big newspapers or magazines and you will notice many illustrations which were first drawn with pen and ink and afterward photo-engraved. What is true of the newspapers is also true of catalogues, circulars and general advertising sheets issued by mercantile firms in different lines of business. Pen drawing is utilized in illustrating all manner of things; portraits, furniture, buildings, interior veiws, caricatures, etc., and a first class artist receives remuneration in line with his accomplishments. In every newspaper and magazine office can be found the special artist, fitting his illustrations to the articles, and news items to be published from time to time. In every large city can usually be found from one to fifty artists, who make a business of furnishing pen drawings to the general public for all purposes. Sometimes portraits are required, often there is a book to be illustrated, again a blooded horse to be drawn; some business office to be pictured, and hundreds of other objects to be represented by the pen drawing.

As illustrating this line of work, we give in the following pages a number of samples from the lessons given through the Western Penman by G. W. Wallace, whose practical lessons in that line, accompanied with artistic illustrations, attracted wide attention.

Following the lesson illustrations we have given some of the many artistic productions embodying different lines of pen work from some of the many artists that have contributed to the Western Penman from time to time. We trust all our readers will find something in these drawings to interest them.
